Building Slavery Resistance
from the Ground Up

 | Communities | Counterparts | Coalitions

Dear friends and supporters:

The heart and soul of Free the Slaves remains our support to communities struggling for freedom. Years of experience and rigorous assessment have shown that our Community Liberation Model yields sustained community resistance to slavery. We are pleased to share the results of the investment made by our supporters.

With a tested model in hand, we are forging partnerships with a new generation of counterparts who can achieve impact at large scale. We are thrilled by the Community Liberation Toolkit, which is capturing many years of experience and learning that we can now readily share with other organizations.

Ending slavery will require a vibrant movement that knits together organizations around the world. In that spirit, Free the Slaves is catalyzing and supporting coalitions that can amplify advocacy and accelerate learning.

As always, we are deeply grateful for our supporters, who make all this work possible.

Growing our Global Footprint

Challenge

There's compelling evidence that the Free the Slaves strategy works: we liberate entire communities and leave them slavery resistant. Our challenge now is to scale-up from pilot projects to achieve true global reach: bringing freedom to thousands of communities every year and returning dignity to people currently trapped in dehumanizing brutality.

Response

Our goal is to enlist large international development organizations in the fight against modern slavery, persuading them to integrate anti-trafficking work into their existing projects to improve health care, child education, food security, microenterprise growth and gender equality.

Our Latest Innovation: Community Liberation Toolkit

Teaching

Our five-volume set of training manuals is designed to transfer the knowledge, skills and norms needed for high-impact international development organizations to integrate anti-trafficking strategies and activities into other community-level interventions. Combined with technical assistance from embedded Free the Slaves experts, the toolkit goal is to improve the reach of development programs by removing modern slavery as a barrier that prevents full community participation – while eradicating human trafficking at the same time.

Testing

Module 1 – Educating and Mobilizing Vulnerable Communities – was completed in 2017 and beta tested with the Salvation Army in India and READ Nepal in Nepal. Module 2 will focus on Victim Liberation and Survivor Rehabilitation and Reintegration. Module 3 will focus on Strengthening the Rule of Law. Module 4 will focus on Improving Access to Socioeconomic Services. Module 5 will focus on Monitoring & Evaluating Integrated Anti-trafficking Projects.

Safeguarding Children

Inspiring rescues and rigorous evaluations – they prove that FTS protects children and underscore the persistent need for our child-focused anti-slavery work.

Senegal

In rural Senegal, FTS-supported child protection committees teach villagers the risks of sending children to far-away cities seemingly for religious instruction. One committee's president traveled 500 miles and found his own nephew begging barefoot on the street. He rescued the boy and now spreads an invaluable anti-slavery message to his community. Our "Protect Our Children" project directs targeted education and outreach. Through FTS partner ENDA, a Senegalese religious leader learned real-life examples of local children trapped in begging street gangs. That very day he returned three boys he had previously recruited to their family, and now supports local anti-slavery efforts.

Ghana

Groundbreaking 2017 research for our "Growing Up Free" program in Ghana revealed widespread trafficking in the 34 communities where FTS works. In one village every household reported at least one child subjected to trafficking or exploitation. The report also outlined our plans to raise awareness, address vulnerabilities, and fight for slavery's littlest victims.

Protecting Women & Girls

Empowerment is essential to sustainable freedom, especially for women and girls. Survivors who lack education and skills are particularly vulnerable to re-enslavement. FTS initiatives offer grassroots support and livelihood training to ensure survivors who break free stay free.

Congo

A young Congolese woman, Benita Furaha, transformed herself from slave to seamstress. She was trapped in the mineral mines and a victim of sexual violence. Fieldworkers helped her join a dressmaking center. She mastered the craft, became literate and now earns an honest living in freedom teaching other survivors to sew.

India

An Indian family trapped in slavery at a brick kiln broke the bonds of slavery bit by bit. Our partner MSEMVS sent fieldworkers to their village to talk about their rights, patiently convincing the hesitant mother to join a self-help group. She learned to sew and save a little money. Today her young daughter, Pooja, goes to school. As role models for their community, they support themselves in freedom.

New Films Show Slavery is Alive

“Eighteen hours a day we worked. We would have guys coming in... and just help themselves with our bodies. Eventually you lose your mind.”

—Timea Nagy

“The slave owner hired men armed with guns and axes. They guarded us the entire day.”

“Working like this, there is no difference between an animal and a human being.”

—Shivanna Puttaiah

A 2017 report on modern slavery, unveiled at the U.N. General Assembly, revealed shocking statistics. The estimated number of slaves worldwide was higher than many experts predicted.

Grassroots Advocacy

We bring slavery to light where it hides, advocating for tougher laws and stronger social services. A victim-centered view – in which survivors get strong psychological, social, educational, economic, medical and vocational support – is essential to sustainable freedom.

Haiti

In partnership with Beyond Borders, our “United to End Child Slavery” program in Haiti encourages adult survivors of child restavèk slavery to speak out on the taboo topic, delivering powerful testimonies in churches and at public gatherings. Their authority and bravery inspire more people to join the network of survivor “brigades” and more villagers to resist restavèk slavery. The brigades started in Port-au-Prince and now our innovative technique is spreading to rural areas.

Nepal

Our Nepalese partner AATWIN successfully lobbied for provisions in the national anti-trafficking law that support survivor rights. The new federal regulation is currently being drafted. It is another anti-slavery milestone for a country that has already made trafficking illegal in its constitution.

Global Leadership to Fight Slavery Worldwide

Free the Slaves has been chosen by our colleagues in the anti-trafficking movement to serve in key leadership positions at both the national and international levels. We are honored that our peers view Free the Slaves as a convening organization that believes in harnessing the power of partnership.

Alliance 8.7: Free the Slaves Executive Director Maurice Middleberg serves on the global coordinating group of Alliance 8.7, a coalition of U.N. agencies, businesses, governments, academics and civil society organizations dedicated to achieving U.N. Sustainable Development Goal 8.7, the end of modern slavery, human trafficking and child labor.

ATEST Coalition: Free the Slaves serves as the secretariat, fiscal sponsor and steering committee co-chair of the Alliance to End Slavery and Trafficking. ATEST is a U.S. based coalition of 11 human rights organizations who work together to advocate for stronger laws, increased funding and a holistic victim-centered approach for U.S. government counter-trafficking programs.

Freedom from Slavery Forum: Free the Slaves also serves as the secretariat for the Freedom from Slavery Forum, which is a global annual convening of movement leaders to map out a coordinated and cohesive civil society agenda for confronting modern slavery. In 2018 the forum is growing in size and moving from the U.S. to Thailand.

Free the Slaves also participates in many other human rights coalitions. Learn more about our advocacy philosophy on the Free the Slaves website at www.freetheslaves.net/thought-leadership/coalitions-affiliations/.

Building Awareness

Free the Slaves is committed to helping the world's news media tell the story of slavery and the battle to end it.

Expertise

Our staffers help journalists communicate the human tragedy of bondage and the joyous triumph of freedom. We are frequently on the front lines when slaves are rescued, and often speak in the halls of power to advocate for stronger governmental action.

Reach

In 2017, Free the Slaves was mentioned 305 times in global media, reaching 524 million people, including influential op-eds for CNN and Reuters. See our "Free the Slaves in the News" webpage for highlights: freetheslaves.net/press-room.

Thought Leadership

Philanthropists, social activists and scholars support FTS because we are one of the world's leading anti-trafficking organizations, with a global reputation for trailblazing work that delivers real results.

Field Visits

In February, Cindy McCain visited FTS and our Congolese partners in Goma on behalf of the McCain Institute for International Leadership. Together we reaffirmed our commitment to grassroots activism and a holistic approach. "Congratulations on your very fine work," she said.

Freedom Ambassadors

In August, renowned humanitarian photographer and FTS supporter Lisa Kristine gave the keynote address at Hong Kong's Anti-Slavery Summit. As her powerful exhibit, "Enslaved," travels the world, it promotes our vital work, grows global awareness and strengthens public resolve.

Technical Conferences

At November's prestigious American Evaluation Association conference, FTS showcased the importance of monitoring and evaluation. Our model demands rigorous M&E – you can't cure what you can't count. We identify slavery hot spots and causes then follow up to record results and improve our methods. We pioneer the science of liberation.
